

Washington State Transportation Commission
2016 Ferry Naming Quick Poll – FROG & VOWS Survey
Jan. 2016
Presentation

Methodology

- ❖ A total of 10,967 online surveys were completed between January 8, 2016 and January 19, 2016 using both the Voice of Washington State (VOWS) and Ferry Riders Opinion Group (FROG) panels.
- ❖ A total of 6,279 surveys were completed by VOWS panel and an additional 4,688 surveys completed by the FROG panel.
- ❖ There was no weighting done within or between the VOWS or FROG data sets. The results are thus representative only of those people that answered the quick poll.
- ❖ The ferry names for consideration were rotated across the total number of surveys so that each name showed up on top an equal number of times.

Ferry Naming - 2016

Top Ferry Name (VOWS/FROG Jan 2016)

SUQUAMISH The ancestral Suquamish have lived in Central Puget Sound for approximately 10,000 years. The major Suquamish winter village was at Old Man House on the shoreline of Agate Passage at d'suq'wub meaning "clear salt water." The Suquamish name translates into the "people of the clear salt water." Chief Seattle was an ancestral leader of the Suquamish Tribe, born in 1786 at the Old Man House Village in Suquamish

SAMMAMISH The Sammamish people were a Coast Salish Native American tribe in the Sammamish River Valley. Sammamish is a blend of two Native American words – samena, which means hunter and mish, which means people. The largest Sammamish village was tlah-WAH-dees at the mouth of the Sammamish River. In 1855, the United States government signed the Treaty of Point Elliott with the leaders of most of the Puget Sound Tribes and they were relocated. Descendants of the Sammamish dispersed into other tribes, including the Suquamish, Snoqualmie and Tulalip.

COWLITZ The Cowlitz tribe provided key assistance with pioneer transportation and commercial activities in what some historians refer to as the Cowlitz Corridor which linked the Columbia River valley with South Puget Sound communities long before Washington Territory was established. The Washington Territorial Legislature honored the tribe by naming one of our earliest counties for them. This county includes a broad flood plain located at the mouth of the Cowlitz River at the Columbia River that was a swamp in pre-European settlement days which some authorities believe was the source for the meaning of the name Cowlitz, which is "capturing medicine spirit."

QUESTION: The Washington State Transportation Commission (WSTC) is considering three names for the next new ferry. In order for a name to be considered, the WSTC requires the proposed names demonstrate: a level of public support; have statewide meaning and significance; and be a suitable name for a Washington State Ferry. Names should have a connection to our state, and tie to such things as; state adopted symbols, tribal names, names of bodies of water, geographic locations, cities, counties, relate to nautical heritage, etc. The WSTC will make the final decision at their meeting in March 2016. The three names under consideration are listed below in no particular order, along with a short explanation of each. Please select your most preferred name.
